			PRESENTING / GENERAL INFORMATION		PRESUMING / SPECIFIC INFORMATION

Presenting information is information that is being presented for the first time. General information is information that does not specify a particular thing. Any one of what is being talked about is implied.

For the first time, a Spanish oil company is to explore offshore oil blocks in Equatorial Guinea.

Just as governments like the US and the UK need oil companies to secure fuel for their global war-making capacity, so the oil companies need their governments' military power to secure control over global oilfields and transportation routes.

Oil provides nearly all the energy for transportation (cars, trucks, buses, airplanes, and many railroad engines).

Petroleum is called a fossil fuel because it was made from the remains of plants and animals.

Presuming and specific information is information that the reader can retrieve from the context. The context may be the context of culture (e.g. the sun), the context of situation (e.g. Put the dog outside), or the context of the preceding or following text. In other words, it is already known by the reader.

In Iraq, blood is cheaper than oil. Over a million Iraqis have died in the last 6 years since the oil tycoon Georges Bush Junior invaded the country in an imperial military exercise designed to balkanize Babylon and to confiscate its natural resources.

Just as governments like the US and the UK need oil companies to secure fuel for their global war-making capacity, so the oil companies need their governments' military power to secure control over global oilfields and transportation routes.

Shell, the oil company that recently trumpeted its commitment to a low carbon future by signing a pre-Bali conference communiqué, has quietly sold off most of its solar business.

More than 80 percent of the petroleum that the refinery processes comes via pipeline from Saudi Arabia.
